

This video demonstrates a map of the concepts of significance to me, indexed as interrelated words and modeled as a video. The letters type onto the screen one at a time, representing my daily life. Each day is separate but is significant in constructing these words (concepts). This often occurs by working through tensions, and it isn't often that I am able to focus on one aspect for long and the big picture is not always seen. It is the push-and-pull learning, a constant state of progression. I chose to use a video model to demonstrate a visual progression of the letters typing to build the words and the tension of the seen and unseen as the movie progresses.
